The Man Who Runs the Perambulating Lodgi g Hons s.

The history of Mr. Pullman is that of a busy man—sagacious, ambitious and useful. It's Not All Wind.

Las Vegas is enterprising. The other towns in the Territory, just springing into existence, say she is windy and gets her prominence on the strength of blowing. There is some truth and much envy in this charge. She is not modest in setting up her claims, but she has Guiteau—"You are making great ado about nothing, Doctor. Ido not pretend I am insane- Tell us what you know about Abraham, get your money and go home."

She has the most energetic, public-spirited, driving set of business men in the Territory. This element alone will make a successful town, because they are up early, watch their opportunity. and keep ahead. During her brief existence she has built up several streets with nearly solid one and two-story blocks, built a horse railroad from the depot to old town, supplied the city with gas, put in a telephone exchange, established two daily papers, organized a police force, put in a line of public water works six miles long with a head 465 feet high, started an academy, a female seminary, given good support to public schools, organized two or three churches and built two or three good hotels and a number of others not so good. Most of the work has been done by individual enterprise, subscription and corporations. There is no Territorial law for organization, and, consequently, no town debt. Even the po-lice is supported by part payment from the county coupled with individual sub-scriptions.—Vermont Union.

The Art of Talking.

If we notice closely we shall find that the people who are the most popular in social life are those who understand not only how to talk themselves, but how to make others talk. This is a very valuable gift. To be able so to direct conversation as not to display your own knowledge, but to draw out the opinions and quicken the thoughts of those with whom you talk-this is an accomplishment indeed. It makes each a contributor to the enjoyment of all, and it leaves with each a pleasant sense of having said something which others were glad to hear. This is very different from the consciousness of having been bored a snubbed-or both, which lesser folks often carry away work waiting to be done, and the time which we spend in chatting about the weather might be very profitably devoted to it. It should be borne in mind that there is scarcely any one of average intelligence who cannot, if he is drawn out, talk instructively about at least one thing, the thing with which he is practically the most familiar, or which is connected with his regular labor. Is your companion on the car or on the street a machinest, a manufac-turer, an artist, a builder—lead the conversation around to the one subject, if there are no others, in which he is sure to be interested. The result will be that you will p ease him, and gain fresh knowledge yourself. Whoever talks much thus with specialists upon their chosen department or labor or thought, will get together a fund of valuable information, not to be learned from the

About Advertising.

The Indianapolis Journal has an admirable article on "The Evolution of Advertising," in the course of which it is very truly said: "Advertising has heen, like every other adjunct of modern life, a matter of evolution. writer. Southwestern Human h. Ernest Havier, a noted fiction in a story called "A Little Incidenthe Southwest," relates how a parson who was beloved by all the country 'round, was murdered, it was supposed, by a man until that day esteemed by his fellow men. They take him from out of the sheriff's custody, hold a Judge Lynch court, and are about to string him up when a stranger presents himself who turns out to be a notorioustage robber, and declares himself to be the parson's butcher. He demands to be hanged on the spot. He could not see an innocent man hang for his crime. The court is touched, and seehim across the border. Although this "little incident" sounds a little thin, we must take Mr. Havier's word for the truth of the story. His moral is a poetical and beautiful one, and we gladiy give our readers a chance to bash with pleasure, for it is they that are implied:

"Manhood and heroism are to be found free, pure and unadulterated in very many places where the hand of science has not reached, the voice of civilization been heard, or the dew of culture descended. But emotions which grow elsewhere and develop into what is finest in tone, are here found in their elemental beauty. It is not often that we see one man who will, in the very shadow of the gallows, substitute himself for another, that the human justice he has outraged may be appealed from to that celestial justice which tells of hope for all. The life of a new nation is a perpetual struggle while it is new, and it is forever being carried on along its borders. The pioneers of the southwest have been the forerunners of communication with a tropical garden, and the sacrifices they made then are being turned to the advantage of the settlers of to-day.
